

Reflection On Our Working Process

by Justus and Annika

We had a really great time working on this podcast. It was a very cool experience for both of us. A reason why we had such a good time working on the podcast is probably that our working process was very well structured from the beginning. The idea we had for the topic of the podcast fit quite well in the topic that we are dealing with in English class at the moment. We were already familiar with a lot of the topical vocabulary. So that made our working process a lot easier.

The first step to do was writing the script for our working process, which we did together in the computer room. In that script we had our procedure all planned out. Throughout the working process we always stuck to our planned procedure on the script, which gave us good reference points. For formulating the script for our podcast, we used the English lessons and finished it at home. In the internet we could find a lot about this topic, but we also used our knowledge from the English lessons. Although we decided to formulate each of our parts on our own, we still helped and complemented each other. As we finished our script we checked for grammar mistakes and looked up the right pronunciation of new words. Then we practiced each of our parts separately. The last English lesson we used for recording our podcast. The recording turned out to be a lot easier than we thought it would be. It took us only one attempt with most of the speaking parts. There were only one or two where we had to record it twice because we fluffed in the first attempt. We recorded with the app "Garage Band". I've already worked with "Garage Band" before to record podcasts, so my experience with it was really helpful. I had to rearrange some parts and add intro and outro music. The editing only took me about 20 minutes.

We both are really content with how our podcast turned out and we also really enjoyed the working process. The fact that our team work was so efficient was probably a big factor for that and also for the quality of our podcast. We're looking forward to producing another podcast soon.
